I would like to give a comment on the quotation by Noam Chomsky. He states that the Internet could be positive step forward for education, organization and participation in a meaningful society.

I don't know when he did say that, but he is very hopeful for the future of society with the Internet. Personally, I agree with him. I also think that the Internet is a positive step for society. We already using the Internet every day and can't live without it. It's used in every aspect of our life. It's used by scientist to communicate to each other and share their's discoveries. It's used by school to study online. And it's also used by governments of every country in the world. They use it to communicate and to make government services online. As for me, I use it to study, play games, listen to music and to communicate with people around the globe. I think that the most important aspect of the Internet is communication. It's makes our life so much easier. We can do almost every thing online now and that's exciting.

So in conclusion, I think that the Internet is very important part of our live and it's not bad for society. But, of course, it has problems. For example, people use it to much and have physical or social problems because of it. But I still hope we will solve this problems too.
